

Just Ask Them!

June 27, 2018

Fusfoo had the opportunity to visit a great program that helps teens with their question about sex, healthy decision making, and relationships. JAM (Just Ask Me) is a peer-led after-school sex education program in the South Bronx run by the non-profit WHEDco. High school students (who have been through the program themselves) serve as peer educators to middle school students.

WHEDco reaches more than 1,000 students annually through youth education and development programs that provide educational and cultural opportunities while empowering students to think critically, make smart career choices, and contribute responsibly as leaders in their community.
